Figure 1. The relationship between the number of children and the number of hours worked per week.

As the number of children increases, the number of hours worked per week decreases. This is because the more children a person has, the more time they need to spend on childcare and household activities, which reduces the time available for work.

The relationship between the number of children and the number of hours worked per week is negative. This means that as the number of children increases, the number of hours worked per week decreases.

are not, in fact, the same. The h in harm is a bilabial fricative, and the h in harmless is a bilabial plosive.

Phonemes are not, therefore, the same as phonetic realizations. The phonetic realizations of a phoneme are the different ways in which the phoneme is realized in speech.

Phonemes are, therefore, abstract entities. They are not physical entities, and they are not mental entities. They are abstract entities in the sense that they are not directly observable.

Phonemes are, therefore, entities that are defined by their relationships to other entities. They are defined by their relationships to other phonemes and to other linguistic entities.
